Short Answer (Sample Responses)

Q1: Location is about where something is (coordinates or relative position), while place looks at the qualities—cultural, historical, or physical—that make a location unique.

Q2: Movement or region could both apply, but movement is often used to study language spread. However, if the language is evolving due to isolation, region might be key to showing how boundaries keep groups apart.

Q3: By grouping areas with shared features, geographers can compare or analyze them more easily without getting lost in infinite local variations.
